

On the Road Again
Montana's Changing Landscape
By William Wyckoff

Foreword by William Cronon

Wyckoff explores Montana's physical and cultural landscape by pairing photographs taken by state highway engineers in the 1920's and 1930's with photographs taken at the same sites today. They offer an intimate view into Montana, into how Montana has changed in the past eighty years and how it may continue to change in the 21st century.

Goldpans, Guns, & Grit
Diamond City from Territorial Gold Rush to Montana Ghost Town
By Kelly Flynn

Miners found gold in Confederate gulch in 1864, and Diamond City, Montana Territory leaped to life that winter, quickly exploding into the territory's third largest boom town, and for a while, the richest. Today, you couldn't find its location on most maps, even historical ones. After the easy-to-find placer gold began to play out, individual and corporate miners turned to hydraulic mining. Diamond City began to fade away within only five years.

As I Remember
Stories of Eastern Montana's Pioneers
Volume I

As told to Mrs. Morris (Gladys Mullet) Kauffman

"There were nostalgic memories of winter evenings with cornmeal mush for supper and popcorn later on. Many who experienced some material deprivations during this frontier's growing pains, determined to give their children 'the things we didn't have' - and failed to recognize the value of the things they did have."

Honky - Tonk Town
Havre, Montana's Lawless Era
By Gary A. Wilson

From its beginnings as Bull Hook railroad siding in 1887, Havre, Montana, was a tough town. Saloons, gambling halls, opium dens, and brothels lined its streets, and with Prohibition came bootleggers eager to exploit Havre's proximity to the Canadian border. Successful businessman and philanthropist C.W. "Shorty" Young rose to power as the leader of the organized crime element, and his Montana hotel known as the "Honky Tonk" catered to all man's carnal desires. Among the West's roughest and most lawless towns, Havre proved to be one of the hardest to tame.
